Level 3

Bhujar Author: Mohammad Shah

Today Rini's class shared interesting stories. Their teacher wanted to know who had a pet at home! Mithu said he had a pet cat named Tuni. Rupa had a pet sheep named Tusi. And Ratan had a pet owl named Tuli.

The whole class burst out laughing: Tuni, Tusi, Tuli! They sounded like

fun. But Rini did not say anything.
She didn't have a pet.

That evening, Rini couldn't wait to talk to her father. “Daddy, can I have a pet like my classmates?” she asked.

“Yes, I suppose so. You can have a cat or a dog,” he said. “Hooray!” said Rini. “I want a dog, please. Oh, please please bring me a dog.”

“Okay, I will bring you a puppy,” Rini's dad told her. "Thieves don't come to steal from your house when you have a dog!”

Soon, Rini's father brought her a puppy. It was a white puppy with really soft fur. Rini named her Bhujar. Bhujar was full of energy!

Her Dad taught Rini how to take care of a puppy. He said, “You must feed her and clean her regularly. Then she will know to be faithful.”

Rini looked after Bhujar everyday.
Rini gave Bhujar baths, and took her for walks and on adventures. Bhujar adored Rini, and Rini adored Bhujar.

Wherever Rini went, Bhujar went with her.

But Bhujar was not allowed to go to school with Rini. When Rini went to school, Bhujar had to stay at home alone.

One day, Bhujar followed Rini to school. She moved around Rini, barking and jumping. “Bhujar, why are you coming with me?” Rini scolded. "You can't come to school. If you do, boys and girls will tease you. And the teacher won't be happy!” So Bhujar went home.

A man was roaming to and fro near the school. Rini had been seeing the man for several days. She knew was not from her village. He comes here very often riding a motorcycle, thought Rini. He always wears a black cap. The man asked, “How are you, Rini? You look so beautiful today. Do you like peanuts? I’d love to buy some peanuts for you.”

“I do not know you,” answered Rini.
“Why are you speaking to me?” The man said, “Everyone knows me. My name is Basu. All children call me Uncle Basu. Let's go, I'll buy some peanuts for you." "No, I don't need peanuts. Please leave me alone!"

Rini went to the class and told her friends about the man. She was surprised that everybody in the class knew about him! He was good friends with all children. Mithu said, “Uncle Basu is very good. A few days ago, he bought delicious peanuts for Ratan and me.”

Rupa said, “Don’t you know about Uncle Basu? He brings so many things for us to eat. Yesterday, Uncle Basu bought us mango-pickles. Uncle Basu is a very good man.” Rini said, “He doesn't seem very good. You are greedy to eat his mango-pickles!”

On her way home, Rini ran into Uncle Basu again. With him were four other men Rini didn't recognize.

Uncle Basu blocked her way. "Let's go, Rini," he said. "I will take you somewhere for a nice outing. Come along with us now.”

“No no, I will not go anywhere,” said Rini. “I have lot of work to do. I have lot of lessons to learn today.” She was terrified.

The man said, “Come on, Rini. Let’s go to the park. The park is very beautiful.” Rini said, “Please, please leave me alone. I don't want to go to the park.” But then men forced her to get on the minibus.

And then, Bhujar arrived. She came running, barking, furious! She bit Uncle Basu and yanked him from the minibus. He began to yell in pain.

The village people came running when they heard the screams and noise. The four strange men drove away in fear. But the man—Uncle Basu—could not get rid of Bhujar. He was caught and confessed his guilt to the people. He said, “We kidnap children and sell them. We get a lot of money in return.” Weeping, Rini hugged Bhujar. She said, “Bhujar, you saved me from that man!” People began to praise Bhujar.

From then on, Bhujar does not stay at home. She is welcome at school with Rini. When Rini is in class, Bhujar sits under the nearby banyan-tree.

Under this banyan tree the wicked man used to come and roam. Now Bhujar barks whenever she sees a stranger.

Now all the children know Rini's pet.
And they all love her... almost as much as Rini does.
